29 MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR ATTORNEYS'
FEE AND OTHER EXPENSES

1 I. THIS COURT HAS EQUITY POWERS TO GRANT PLAINTIFFS 2 THEIR ATTORNEYS' FEES AND OTHER EXPENSES.

3 For nearly a century the United States Supreme Court has 4 sanctioned the exercise of equitable power by district courts
5 in awarding attorneys' fees. Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U.S. 527
6 (1881). Very recently the Supreme Court stated the controlling 7 principle as follows:

8 Although the traditional American rule ordinarily dis-
9 favors the allowance of attorney's fees in the absence 10 of statutory or contractual authorization, federal courts, 11 in the exercise of their equitable powers, may award 12 attorney's fees when the interests of justice so require.
13 Indeed, the power to award such fees "is part of the ori-14 ginal authority of the chancellor to do equity in a particu-
15 lar situation." Sprague v. Ticonic National Bank, 307 US 16 161, 166, 83 L.Ed. 1184, 59 S.Ct. 777 (1939), and federal 17 courts do not hesitate to exercise this inherent equitable 18 power whenever "overriding considerations indicate the 19 need for such recovery."

20 Hall v. Cole, 412 U.S. 1 (1973).

21 The early cases were generally those in which a common 22 fund was produced as a result of the litigation. Because a large 23 class would benefit, and it would be unjust to require a few 24 members of the class who initiated the litigation to bear all of 25 the costs, with the others bearing no cost, the Supreme Court 26 approved the granting of fees against the unsuccessful party in 27 such cases. In later years the great demands for private litiga-28 tion to effectuate public policy, to remedy official behavior 29 which is not in accordance with law, and to spread the burdens of 30 costly litigation equitably have provoked considerable amount 31 from legal writers and scholars.<sup>1</sup>

1           The trend of Supreme Court decisions has been to broaden 2 approval of judicial awards of attorneys' fees so as to provide 3 litigants with a means for being made whole in equitable cases.
4 See Newman v. Piggie Park Enterprises Inc., 390 U.S. 400 (1968);
5 Mills v. Electric Auto-Lite Co., 396 U.S. 375 (1970); Hall v. Cole, 6 supra; Northcross v. Board of Education, 412 U.S. 427 (1973). The 7 inquiry now is merely whether or not the plaintiffs have demon-8 strated that equity supports the award of fees.

9           In the words of a federal district judge for the Northern 10 District of California:

11       Mills and Piggie Park touched responsive chords, and the 12 federal judiciary responded in a myriad of decisions indi-13 cating that where a plaintiff seeks only equitable relief, 14 that strict application of the American rule no longer makes 15 sense as a policy to promote access to courts. Hall v. Cole,

1           An important California decision categorized the situa-2 tions in which courts have utilized their equitable powers to 3 award attorneys' fees. LaRaza Unida v. Volpe, 57 F.R.D. 94
4 (N.D. Cal. 1972). Because of the court's scholarly and helpful 5 approach in that decision and its applicability to the facts of 6 the case at hand, the following analysis closely parallels that 7 used in LaRaza.

9           A. An Award Of Attorneys' Fees Is Justified
10           Where The Behavior Of Defendants Is Obdurate.

11           Courts have often utilized their equitable powers in 12 awarding attorneys' fees where the conduct of the adverse party 13 has been obdurate or in bad faith. E.g., Knight v. Auciello, 453
14 F.2d 852 (1st Cir. 1972); Gates v. Collier, ___ F.2d ___, No. 73-15 1790 (5th Cir. Dec. 5, 1973) (Copy of slip opinion attached).
16 Kahan v. Rosenstiel, 424 F.2d 161, 167 (3rd Cir. 1970), cert.
17 denied Clon Alden Corp. v. Kahan, 398 U.S. 950 (1970); Wyatt v.
18 Stickney, 344 F.Supp. 387, 408 (M.D. Ala. 1972). But the courts 19 do not require a showing of bad faith to establish obduracy. See, 20 e.g., Lee v. Southern Home Sites Corp., 444 F.2d 143, 144 (5th 21 Cir. 1971).

22           An extreme example of this type of case is Pyramid Lake 23 Tribe of Indians v. Morton, 360 F.Supp 669 (D.D.C. 1973). There, 24 the court previously had found that actions of the Secretary of 25 Interior's representatives in managing a federal reclamation pro-26 ject had disposed of water which otherwise would have replenished 27 Pyramid Lake -- virtually the only asset of the tribe. The federal 28 officials "acted in an obdurate and intransigent manner, refusing 29 in good faith to carry out the Court's directives, and as a con-30 sequence unnecessarily extended the litigation to the detriment of 31 the Tribe." 360 F.Supp. at 670. The court awarded counsel fees 32 and other expenses in spite of a general statutory policy denying litigants recovery of such costs against the federal government.

1 The reasons for this departure were the special circumstances and 2 policies surrounding the relationship between Indians and the 3 federal government. Accord, Edwardsen v. Morton, ___ F. Supp. ___, 4 No. 2014-71 (D.D.C. Dec. 21, 1973).

5           It may be that this is not a case which falls within 6 the "obdurate behavior" category. In La Raza Unida v. Volpe, 7 supra, the court found specifically that the state defendants 8 had failed to comply with federal law "despite sincere efforts" 9 and "good faith". Before this case was decided the law of Indian 10 treaty fishing rights was far from clear. However, there were 11 certain basic principles which had been established for several 12 years but which the defendants consistently ignored. This was 13 especially true of the Washington State Department of Game.
14 Furthermore, while there has been a high degree of cooperation 15 among counsel especially during the last year, the case has not 16 been free of problems which could have been avoided by an obser-17 vance of existing substantive law and adherence to the Federal 18 Rules of Civil Procedure. Some of the examples and instances 19 of behavior on the part of the defendants which could be charac-20 terized as "intransigent", or "obdurate", most of which are 21 confirmed in the Court's Findings of Fact, follow:

22           1. The Game Department has continued to insist 23 upon a lack of any special Indian treaty right to 24 fish notwithstanding a line of United States and State 25 Supreme Court cases stretching over 65 years.

26           2. The state has continued application and en-27 forcement of state game fish regulations restricting 28 off-reservation fishing by treaty tribes without a 29 showing of necessity for conservation, even after 30 decisions of the state supreme court placing the burden 31 of establishing conservation necessity on the state.
32 Department of Game v. Puyallup Tribe, 81 Wash. 2d

1 561, 497 P.2d 171 (1972); Department of Game v.
2 Puyallup Tribe, 71 Wash.2d 245, 422 P.2d 754 (1967).

3 3. The Department of Game consciously has failed 4 to obtain data and facts available to it in matters
5 relative to Indian treaty fishing.

6 4. The Department of Game has failed to advise 7 the Game Commission and the Legislature of relevant 8 information in its files needed to determine the pro-9 bable impact of Indian net fishing on the fishery.

10 5. Game has conveyed misleading and incorrect
11 information to the Game Commission, the State Legis-12 lature and the public concerning the relevant data 13 known to it about treaty tribal fishing. (See de-14 tailed enumeration in Plaintiffs Post Trial Brief, 15 pages 59-64.)

16 6. Even after the decision in Puyallup II the 17 Game Department promulgated regulations applicable 18 to Indian treaty fishing without adequate supporting 19 biological facts and data.

20 7. The Game Department has continued to engage 21 in conduct discriminatory as to Indian treaty fishing 22 even after prohibition of such conduct in Puyallup I.

23 8. Both the Game and Fisheries Departments have 24 engaged in frequent, continued, and flagrant violations
25 of plaintiff's rights to due process of law by seizing 26 nets and other fishing gear and retaining them with no 27 judicial declaration of forfeiture or confiscation.

28 9. Game has enacted regulations year after year 29 without giving the tribes or the State Code Reviser 30 advance notice of its intention to consider re-31 gulations which would result in the prohibition of 32 Indian net fishing.

1           10. Game refused to place the treaty tribes 2 in Western Washington on its list of persons who 3 receive notice of Game Commission meetings in spite 4 of a written request to do so from the United States 5 Attorney.

6           11. The State Department of Fisheries, while 7 purporting to allow Indians to take a fair share of 8 the fishery, imposed regulations resulting in only 9 a five percent share of the harvest.

10           12. The Department of Fisheries presented to the 11 Court in this case misleading allegations concerning 12 Indian mismanagement of the fisheries (see Plaintiffs' 13 Post Trial Brief, pages 74-75).

14           13. While purporting to follow the decision in 15 Sohappy v. Smith, 302 F.Supp. 899 (D. Ore. 1969), 16 the Department of Game exercised its police power in 17 a manner so as to deprive the plaintiff tribes of 18 a reasonable opportunity to take the portion of the 19 total harvest of anadromous fish in the state to which 20 they are entitled.

21           14. The Department of Fisheries failed to implement 22 dictates of the United States and State Supreme Courts 23 fully, although purporting to do so, giving as their only 24 excuse to the fact that this case has been in litigation 25 for over three years.

26           15. Both the Departments of Fisheries and Game 27 have dealt with fishing by members of the plaintiff 28 tribes in a manner different from that expressly 29 provided in their respective regulations.

30           16. The State and the Director of Fisheries have 31 totally closed a substantial number of usual and 32 accustomed fishing areas of the plaintiff tribes to

2 all forms of net fishing while permitting commercial 3 net fishing for salmon elsewhere in the same runs 4 of fish.

5 17. The Department of Game repeatedly raised 6 issues that have been decided by United States Su-7 preme Court and other courts. Some of them were 8 urged not only once but at least three times in 9 this case. (E.g., the so-called "equal footing 10 doctrine" and the contention that exclusive juris-11 diction in the case is in the Indian Claims 12 Commission). It is submitted that such contentions 13 are so totally lacking in merit as to be frivolous 14 and interposed solely for the purposes of delay.

15 18. The Department of Game continually 16 refused to supply answers to interrogatories 17 propounded to them in good faith by plaintiffs. This 18 required plaintiffs' counsel to bring on three 19 motions at great expense and cause a delay of nearly 20 eight months during the case's preparation. Of course 21 during that period the practices and policies of the 22 state which have now been found unlawful continued 23 to the detriment of plaintiffs.

24 While plaintiffs believe that there are solid grounds for 25 finding that the state defendants' conduct comes within the cate-26 gory of behavior which can by its nature form the basis of award 27 of attorneys' fees, total reliance is not placed upon this basis.
28 There are two other distinctive rationales for awarding a success-29 ful plaintiff his attorneys' fees and other expenses.

30 B. An Award of Attorneys' Fees is Justified
31 When the Judgment Results in a "Common Fund" 32 Benefiting a Class of Plaintiffs.

Where a plaintiff's efforts result in substantial benefits

1 to others who are not parties to the litigation, an award of 2 attorneys' fees is a means of compensating the plaintiffs for the 3 benefit that they have bestowed upon the entire class. The theory 4 is that the court can use equitable powers to protect a few liti-5 gants who press an issue from having to absorb all the costs.

6 The common fund situation exists more frequently where a 7 monetary award for an entire class is produced. See Sprague v.
8 Nat'l Bank, supra. A good example of this type of case is a 9 shareholders derivative suit. The United States Supreme Court
10 recently upheld an award of attorneys' fees in such a case. Mills 11 v. Electric Auto-Lite Co., supra. The court there pointed out, 12 however, that no pecuniary benefit to the class need be demon-13 strated. 396 U.S. at 393. And although some courts have 14 suggested that cases to remedy constitutional violations by 15 states generally do not fall within the "fund" mold "without 16 considerable cutting and trimming." Bradley v. School Board of 17 the City of Richmond, 52 F.R.D. 28 (E.D. Va. 1971), the Fourth 18 Circuit Court of Appeals sitting en banc has approved the award-19 ing of attorneys' fees in such cases. Brewer v. School Board 20 of the City of Norfolk, 456 F.2d 943 (4th Cir. 1972).

21 As discussed in the following section, this case is one of 22 great public importance in which the beneficiaries include all 23 treaty tribes of Western Washington and their members. Beyond 24 Indians themselves, the citizens of the State of Washington 25 (and, indeed, of the United States) are benefitted. Presumably, 26 therefore, the common fund rationale for awarding attorneys' 27 fees, especially in light of the great public issues which have 28 been resolved by the case, would justify an award of attorneys' 29 fees to the plaintiffs.

1           C. Plaintiffs Are Entitled to Attorneys' Fees When 2           They Act As "Private Attorneys General."

3           Where plaintiffs initiate a lawsuit to enforce a strong 4 national policy, they often benefit a class of people far broader 5 than those actually involved in the litigation. Such plaintiffs 6 have been termed by the United States Supreme Court 7 attorneys general." Newman v. Piggie Park Enterprises, Inc., 8 supra. See also Northcross v. Board of Education, supra; Sims 9 v. Amos, 336 F.Supp. 924, 340 F.Supp. 691 (M.D. Ala. 1972), 10 aff'd 409 U.S. 942 (1972); NAACP v. Allen, 340 F.Supp. 793
11 (M.D. Ala. 1972); Wyatt v. Stickney, 344 F.Supp. 387, 408
12 (M.D. Ala. 1972); Lee v. Southern Home Sites Corp., 444 F.2d 143
13 (5th Cir. 1971); La Raza Unida v. Volpe, supra.

14           Indeed, in a case such as this, the award of attorneys' fees 15 and other litigation expenses is not only permissible, but may 16 be legally required to effectuate national policy. In Wyatt 17 v. Stickney, supra, the court stated that

18           in order to eliminate the impediments to pro bono 19 publico litigation and to carry out congressional 20 policy, an award of attorneys' fees not only is 21 essential but also is legally required. . . . To 22 burden only plaintiffs with these costs [attorneys' 23 fees] not only is unfair but also is legally 24 impermissible. . . . In this case, the most logical 25 way to spread the burden among those benefitted is 26 to grant attorneys' fees.

27           344 F.Supp. at 409. The same court, in NAACP v. Allen, supra 28 at 709, stated: "The award loses much of its discretionary 29 character and becomes a part of the effective remedy a court 30 should fashion to encourage public minded suits and to carry out 31 congressional policy." And in La Raza Unida v. Volpe, supra 32 at 101, the court found that "to force the private litigants to bear their own costs here would be tantamount to a penalty, and it seems somewhat inequitable to punish litigants who have policed those charged with implementing and following congressional mandates.

          Scrutiny of the circumstances in this case shows that it falls squarely within the "private attorney general" rationale for

1 awarding attorneys' fees. The rationale calls for the effectuation 2 of strong public policies through the litigation, conferral of 3 benefits (in various degrees) on a large number of persons as a 4 result of plaintiffs' efforts, and a substantial need for, and 5 financial burden upon, plaintiffs in attempting private enforcement.
6 Sec, LaRaza Unida v. Volpe, supra.

7 1. Public Importance and Benefits of the Case

8 That upholding the treaty obligations of the United States to 9 Indians is an important national policy is beyond doubt. It is 10 confirmed first by the Supremacy Clause of the United State Con-11 stitution. Further, The United States Supreme Court has said on 12 the subject:

13 It is our responsibility to see that the terms of the 14 treaty are carried out, so far as possible, in accor-15 dance with the meaning they are understood to have by 16 the tribal representatives at the Council and in a spirit which generously recognizes the full obligation of this nation to protect the interests of a dependent people.

17 Pulce v. Washington, 315 U.S. 681, 684-685 (1942). Last year in 18 deciding a landmark case brought by a Nevada tribe to protect its 19 water and fishery rights, the District Court for the District of 20 Columbia referred to a "vast body of case law" and a "detailed 21 statutory scheme for Indian affairs" as evidence of the great 22 importance of the national obligations to Indians. Pyramid Lake 23 Painte Tribe of Indians v. Morton, 354 F.Supp 252, (D. D.C.
24 1973).

25 The President of the United States in outlining the Indian 26 policy of this Administration in a Message to Congress dated July 27 7, 1970 stated,

28 The special relationship between Indians and the 29 Federal government is the result of solemn obligations
30 which have been entered into by the United States Gov-31 ernment. Down through the years, through formal and 32 informal agreements our government has made specific commitments to the Indian people... [T]he special relationship arising from these agreements continues to carry immense moral and legal force.

116 Cong. Rec. 23258 (1970).

1 The President then proceeded to outline his policy for Indian 2 affairs emphasizing the great national importance of implementing 3 it. Certainly the effectuation of Indian policies based on com-4 mitments in treaties with the United States is as important as 5 the public policies involved in advancing labor union democracy, 6 implementing relocation and highway policy, assuring fair and 7 informed corporate suffrage, furthering environmental and many 8 other of the statutory policies, the implementation of which 9 courts have found should be encouraged by awarding counsel fees.
10 As with protection of civil rights, effectuation of national pol-11 icy in honoring treaties with Indian tribes has its basis in the 12 United States Constitution.

13 The great public importance of this case was acknowledged by 14 this Court in its final decision:

15 This court is confident the vast majority of the 16 residents of this state, whether of Indian heri-17 tage or otherwise, and regardless of personal inter-18 est in fishing, are fair, reasonable and law abiding 19 people. They expect that kind of solution to all 20 adjudicated controversies, including those pertaining 21 to treaty right fishing, and they will accept and a-22 abide by those decisions even if adverse to interests 23 of their occupation or recreational activities.

24 More than a century of frequent and often violent 25 controversy between Indians and Non-Indians over 26 treaty right fishing has resulted in deep distrust 27 and animosity on both sides. . . .

28 The ultimate objective of this decision is to deter-29 mine every issue of fact and law presented and, at 30 long last, thereby finally settle, either in this 31 decision or on appeal thereof, as many as possible 32 of the divisive problems of treaty right fishing which for so long have plagued all of the citizens of this area, and still do.

Final Decision, pp 5-6. The declaratory judgment and decree in this case stated further that:

It is the responsibility of all citizens to see that the terms of the Stevens' treaty are carried out, so far as possible, in accordance with the meaning they were understood to have by the tribal representatives at the councils, and in a spirit which generously recognizes full obligation of this nation to protect the interests of a dependent people.

Declaratory Judgment and Decree, Page 5, Paragraph 12.

1           2. Role of Plaintiff Tribes

2           There can be no question that plaintiffs in this case
3 seeking vindication of the tribes' treaty rights, acted to imple-4 ment a strong public policy. A resolution of the disputes which 5 have raged in this State for a century is unquestionably in the 6 interest not only of the tribes and their members, but the state 7 and all of its citizens. Society in general is better off when 8 the legal obligations of citizens are understood and enforced
9 according to law. The public policy expressed in many decisions 10 of the highest court of this land, by the Executive and Congress, 11 and in the treaties and the United States Constitution 12 been defined and strengthened by this litigation.

13           It has been this Court's intention from the outset of the 14 litigation that as many tribes as possible ought to be included 15 as parties. Ultimately, after the commencement of the litigation, 16 which was in large part due to the urging of the tribes over a 17 period of many years, the tribes themselves intervened. It is no 18 secret that the tribes did everything within their power to move 19 the United States to bring a suit such as United States v. Wash-20 ington for many years. A sharply worded, once confidential memor-21 andum from Deputy Solicitor for the Department of the Interior 22 George D. Dysart to his superiors dated several months before, was 23 made public in Senate Subcommittee hearings. That memorandum 24 chided the Departments of Justice and Interior for refusing to 25 support the Indian tribes in their controversy with the state over 26 off-reservation treaty fishing rights. Mr. Dysart stated, among 27 other things, "The United States has dallied around with the Indian 28 fishing problem in the State of Washington for too long without 29 following through with a firm, meaningful, and constructive role." 30 The memorandum was one in a series urging litigation on behalf of 31 Washington State tribes. Not surprisingly, when this suit was 32 finally filed in late 1970, there was considerable skepticism on

1 the part of Indians. Commencement of the long awaited litigation, 2 which became known as United States v. Washington, brought expres-3 sions of fear by Indians that political pressure might impair the 4 type of advocacy which the United States could afford to the 5 tribes. Indeed, there was some doubt as to whether the case would 6 ever go to trial. From the outset, the tribes were critical of 7 the manner in which the United States pressed the case, question-8 ed the theories urged by the government, and were reluctant to 9 entrust their rights entirely to government attorneys. Indeed, 10 the cynicism of many Indians concerning United States represen-11 tation continued until the eve of trial.

12 Although the plaintiff tribes were pleased with the excellent 13 and zealous advocacy which the federal attorneys handling the 14 case demonstrated at trial, there can be little question that 15 private counsel for the Indian tribes made an immense contribution 16 to the full and fair presentation of all claims and theories for 17 relief as well as the preparation and presentation of the case.
18 And it is obvious to those who have been connected with the case 19 from the outset that the position of the government certainly was 20 influenced by private counsel. At several points in the case, 21 private counsel bore a large part of, and in some instances full, 22 responsibility for preparation of motions, briefs, the conduct of 23 discovery, argument on specific points, and several other matters.

24 Congress has been fully cognizant of the need for Indian 25 tribes to have access to a federal forum and to litigate matters on 26 their own behalf on the same footing as the United States Attorney

27

28 The extent of the pressures which can be exerted upon the Justice 29 Department in the course of litigation initiated by it is exempli-30 fied in the case of Fulbrook Public Utility v. United States, 202
31 F. 2d 942 (9th Cir. 1953). In this complicated and lengthy water 32 rights litigation, local sentiment was so strong against the law-33 suit that Congress put a provision in the Justice Department ap-34 propriation act to prevent use of any of the funds for preparation 35 or prosecution of the specific case.

1 litigates as their trustee. See, 28 U.S.C. 1362,<sup>3</sup> which is one of 2 the bases for jurisdiction in this case. (Conclusion of Law 1(d)).

3 The fact that the United States is also a party to the case 4 in no way diminishes the plaintiff tribes' rights to recover their 5 attorneys' fees. Private plaintiffs regularly recover their 6 attorneys' fees in antitrust actions in spite of the fact the 7 Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice is engaged in a 8 companion action or the same suit. Likewise, in a number of civil 9 rights actions where the United States and private plaintiffs have 10 joined in litigating against the same party on the same cause the 11 courts have awarded fees. E.g., Gates v. Collier, supra.

12 3. Entitlement of Parties Represented by Non-Profit Law Firms.

13 Lest there be any question about the entitlement of plaintiffs 14 to attorneys' fees because they are represented by Native American 15 Rights Fund (NARF), a non-profit law firm, it deserves mention 16 that the courts consistently have made awards to parties who are 17 represented by such counsel. E.g., Newman v. Piggie Park Enter-18 prises, supra, (plaintiffs represented by attorneys with NAACP 19 Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc.). Miller v. Amusement 20 Enterprises, Inc., 426 F.2d 534, 538 (5th Cir. 1970); Lea v.
21 Cone Mills Corp., 438 F.2d 86, 88 (4th Cir. 1971); Clark v.
22 American Marine Corp., 320 F. Supp 709 (E.D. La. 1970), 23 Affirmed 437 F.2d 959 (5th Cir. 1971); La Raza Unida v. Volpe, 24 supra, 57 F.R.D. at 98.

25 The courts considering the issue universally have held that 26 parties represented by counsel supported by foundation grants and 27 charitable contributions, as is NARF, are no less entitled to fees 28 than are other litigants. For instance, in Clark v. American 29

30 <sup>3</sup>
31 The legislative history of 28 U.S.C. 1362 makes it clear that access to 32 federal courts to litigate federal questions on the same basis as the United States Attorney -- without the requirement of a jurisdictional amount -- was intended by the act. See H.R. Rept. No.
2040, 89th Cong., 2d Sess. (1966); S. Rep. No. 1507, 89th Cong., 2d Sess., (1966).

1 Marine Inc., supra, the district court held that it was immaterial
2 that "plaintiffs' counsel came from a lawyer who was on the staff
3 of the NAACP Legal Defense & Educational Fund, Inc." The court 4 added, "whether or not he agreed to pay a fee and in what amount is 5 not decisive. The criterion for the court is not what the parties 6 agreed, but what is reasonable." 320 F.Supp. at 711. The Court 7 of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has held that the refusal to 8 accept fees by an attorney is not in conflict with an award of 9 fees. Sanders v. Russell, 401 F.2d 241 (5th Cir. 1968). The 10 same court later held that:

11       What is required is not an obligation to pay attorney 12       fees. Rather what -- and all -- that is required is 13       the existence of a relationship of attorney and client, 14       a status which exists wholly independently of compen-15       sation...

16       Congress did not intend that vindication of statutorily
17       guaranteed rights would depend on the rare liklihood 18       of economic resources in the private party (or class 19       members) or the availability of legal assistance from 20       charity -- individual, collective or organized.

21 Miller v. Amusement Enterprises, Inc., supra, 426 F.2d at 538-539.

22       The court in La Raza Unida v. Volpe, supra, suggested some 23       policy reasons for granting fees to parties whose counsel do not 24       regularly charge fees.

25       The fact that attorneys in this action, Public Advo-26       cates, Inc., require no fees from their clients or 27       that they receive tax-exempt foundation money is not 28       germane to their status as private attorneys-general...
29       We cannot presume Congress intended to rely on tax-30       exempt foundations to fund the costs of litigation in 31       order to effectuate its policies, nor that such fund-32       ing will continue in the future.

33       57 F.R.D. at 98 n.6. The court recognized that "responsible repre-34       sentatives of the public should be encouraged to sue, particularly 35       where government entities are involved as defendants." But the 36       court also took account of the fact that initiating such litiga-37       tion is often beyond the reach of citizens.

38       In many "public interest" cases only injunctive relief 39       is sought, and the average attorney or litigant must 40       hesitate, if not shudder at the thought of "taking on" 41       an entity such as the California Department of Highways,

1 with no prospect of financial compensation for ef-
2 forts and expenses rendered. The expense of litigation 3 in such a case poses a formidable, if not insurmountable, 4 obstacle.

5 57 F.R.D. at 101. In a footnote, the court added that "absent 6 foundation funding, it is simply not economically rational for 7 any single individual or small group of individuals, to attempt 8 to capture their minute portion of aggregate good by incurring 9 large expense to enforce a widely held right." 57 F.R.D. at 101 10 n.10.

11 In this case, most of the tribes are impoverished and other-12 wise would be unable to retain counsel were it not for the avail-13 ability of attorneys willing to undertake their cause without fee.
14 NARF generally requires the payment of no fees by its clients other 15 than those which are recovered as a result of court awards. Its 16 clients have been awarded attorneys' fees and expenses by both 17 federal<sup>5</sup> and state courts<sup>6</sup>. Reimbursement of such fees and out-18 of pocket expenses makes it possible to continue the work of NARF 19 on behalf of the same and other Native American clients throughout 20 the country.

21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28
29 <sup>4</sup> It should be recognized that many of the tribes not represented 30 by NARF have retained counsel who have agreed to work for little 31 or no fees.

32 <sup>5</sup> E.g., Pyramid Lake Paiute Tribe v. Morton, supra, 360 F.Supp 669

33 <sup>6</sup> E.g., Mobil Oil Corporation v. Local Boundary Commission of the State of Alaska, P. 2d (Alaska S.Ct. File no. 1967, January 16, 1974.)

1 II. AWARD OF ATTORNEYS' FEES AGAINST DEFENDANTS 2 AS OFFICERS OF THE STATE OF WASHINGTON IS 3 PROPER

4 In a number of cases against states and their elected and 5 appointed officials, it has been contended that attorneys' fees are 6 barred by sovereign immunity or by the Eleventh Amendment to the 7 Constitution. These contentions regularly have been overruled by 8 the courts considering them. The court in LaRaza Unida v. Volpe, 9 supra, considered the argument carefully at 57 F.R.D. 101-02 n.11, 10 holding that the power to tax such costs is a necessary incident 11 to the court's jurisdiction and thus no statute is required to 12 overcome the state's sovereign immunity in federal court. It was 13 further pointed out, citing Sims v. Amos, supra, that individual 14 officers of the state may be restrained by injunction and that a 15 court's equitable power to enjoin them includes the power to re-16 quire them to pay costs incident to obtaining the injunction. The 17 court then cited several cases in which various state officials 18 and regulatory bodies were held liable for the attorneys' fees of 19 successful litigants.<sup>7</sup>

20 The only issue in Gates v. Collier, supra, was the question 21 of whether attorneys' fees and expenses could be awarded against the 22 State of Mississippi. The court held squarely that the trial court 23 had power to assess attorneys' fees and expenses against the in-24 dividual defendants and, furthermore, that the trial court's pro-25 scription that payment of such costs would be made from funds to

26
27 <sup>7</sup>The courts have recognized that an award of attorneys' fees 28 against an individual state official will not be his personal 29 responsibility. In Gates v. Collier, the court stated, "[E]very-30 one knows that they would be 'bailed out' by the state." The 31 court in LaRaza Unida v. Volpe, supra, pointed out that Califor-32 nia state law made such costs reimbursable by the public entity employing the individual public officials and noted "since the money will come from the state treasury the awarding of fees in the instant case will also serve the other objective of the Mills decision -- matching, to the extent that the Court's jurisdiction over the matter makes possible, the costs and benefits of litigation." 57 F.R.D. at 101.

1 be appropriated by the state legislature did not vitiate the award.
2 The Fifth Circuit in Gates relied heavily upon Sims where the 3 Supreme Court's affirmance of the three judge trial court's hold-4 ing lays the contention of state immunity to rest.

6 III. THE AMOUNT OF ATTORNEYS' FEES

7 The plaintiff tribes submit to the discretion of the court
8 the amount to be set as attorneys' fees. An affidavit by plain-9 tiffs' counsel, David H. Getches, will be submitted detailing the 10 hours devoted to this case over the past three and one-half years, 11 along with a schedule of extraordinary expenses incurred in the 12 prosecution of this case.<sup>8</sup> Plaintiffs suggest that it would be 13 reasonable to award fees in this case based upon most recent mini-14 mum fee schedule for the Seattle-King County Bar date May, 1971, 15 setting $35 per hour as a charge for attorneys' time in this area.<sup>9</sup>

16 Hours expended are, of course, only one of the factors con-17 sidered by the courts in awarding fees. The pertinent factors that 18 courts have considered in fixing the dollar value of attorneys' 19 efforts appear generally to be the following:

- 20 (1) the time and labor required on the case;
- 21 (2) the benefit to the public of encouraging legitimate suits;
- 22 (3) the benefit to the public of the parti-
23 cular case;

24
25 <sup>8</sup>The shortness of time for post-trial motions did not permit a 26 complete canvassing of counsel's records and a computation of the 27 hours spent on this case for submission simultaneously with this 28 motion and memorandum. Preparation of appropriate documentation of services rendered and time expended is in progress and counsel will endeavor to have it completed before the hearing on this motion.

29 <sup>9</sup>The fact that attorneys employed by NARF are unable to show any 30 customary time charge to be considered by the court has led one 31 United States District Court to limit its award of attorneys' fees 32 to what it called the "bedrock minimum" of $30 an hour. Pyramid Lake Paiute Tribe of Indians v. Borton, supra, 360 F.Supp at 672.

- 1 (4) the skill demanded by the novelty,
2 complexity and intricacy of the 3 issues;
- 3 (5) the skill of the opposition;
- 4 (6) the skill actually demonstrated by 5 the lawyers whose fees are being set;
- 6 (7) the standing of the attorneys involved 7 in the legal community in which they practice and the prevailing rates of compensation.<sup>10</sup>

8 The Court's comments relative to the manner in which this case has 9 been prepared and presented by counsel are set forth on pages 3 and 10 4 of the Final Decision and are relevant to these considerations.

11 CONCLUSION

12 It would be difficult to conceive of a situation in the 13 State of Washington in which spreading the cost of peaceably re-14 solving a public dispute through the legal system is more appro-15 priate than the present case. The Indian tribes and the public 16 have awaited this kind of definitive adjudication of Indian treaty 17 fishing rights almost since the treaties were negotiated more than 18 a century ago. To require defendants to bear the costs of this action judged to have protected over $1 million in union members' 29 dues from dishonest management); Elankenship v. Boyle, 337 F.Supp.

296, 302-303 (D.D.C. 1972) (the court awarded attorneys' fees of 30 $45 per hour plus an incremental $165,000 because of the complex-31 ity of the case (3325,699); Rosenfield v. Southern Pac. Co., 334 32 4 PEP 72 (C.D. Cal., Dec. 2, 1971) (the court awarded attorneys' fees of $75 per hour ($30,000)).

1 action is compelled by justice and is well-founded in contemporary 2 case law. Both the actions of the defendants and their ability 3 to diffuse the burden among all citizens of the state, Indian and 4 non-Indian, underscore the fairness of requiring them to compensate 5 plaintiffs for their attorneys' fees and expenses in this case.
6 The equity of such an award is indisputable in view of the relative 7 poverty of the plaintiff tribes and the tremendous public importance 8 of litigating the case in which their full participation was valu-9 able, if not indispensable.
